Special Guest Speakers

Nisha Varia is the advocacy director of Human Rights Watch's women's rights division. Her work focuses on women workers, gender-based violence, migrants' rights, and human rights research methodology. She also supports the division's work on sexual and reproductive rights, discriminatory laws, and women, peace, and security. Varia developed and provides Human Rights Watch's training on interviewing survivors of trauma.

Amanda Klasing is the acting co-director of the women's rights division at Human Rights Watch. Her work focuses on sexual and domestic violence, reproductive rights and women's health, indigenous rights, and economic and social rights. She is a specialist in the rights to water and sanitation.

Skye Wheeler is an emergencies researcher for the Women's Rights Division. She monitors and documents women's rights abuses during human rights crises including situations of armed conflict and attacks on civilians, mass displacement and crisis following disasters. She is currently researching the impact of extreme weather events like hurricanes, flooding and forest fires—worsened by global warming—on women and girls, especially from poor and marginalized communities.
